ABSTRACT

Designed to help rural officials, including tribal governments and community leaders, quickly identify sources of assistance for rural development, this guide catalogs approximately 440 sources of public and private national level technical and financial resource assistance. The sources of assistance listed generally focus on local governments and communities rather than individuals. Only those sources that are available in at least a 3-state area are included. Although the federal government has by far the largest number of listings, the guide is unique in its inclusion of private nonprofit resource providers--interest groups, service and civic clubs, professional and trade associations, churches, and foundations. Sources are listed in six broad categories: Community Facilities, Services (including education), General Community Improvement, Natural Resources, Information/Research/Liaison, and Multipurpose Foundations. Within each topic, sources of technical and then financial assistance are presented. Each reference includes the resource, resource title, resource provider, who may apply, special conditions (if any), resource provided, and resource contact. The appendix lists federal agencies' state and regional offices, state government development agencies, and other useful federal and state contacts, as well as regional offices for private providers. A comprehensive subject index provides a listing of key words to help locate specific information. (BRR)

FOREWORD

It is a great pleasure to present this Rural Resources Guide to the citizens of rural America. I hope that it will provide assistance to rural officials and citizens throughout this country. I have confidence in rural America and in rural Americans. Working together with their local governments and the private sector, rural people can effect change in their areas. The Federal role in this effort is one of support; the direction is primarily determined by rural citizens themselves. The "Guide" serves this purpose by providing information to local government officials so that they can use it in accomplishing their own specific objectives.

In 1982, I appointed a National Advisory Council on Rural Development. These dedicated men and women have proved an invaluable resource to the Department of Agriculture. Of the many important recommendations this Council has made, perhaps the most important concerned the need for a catalog of public and private national-level resources that was specifically written for rural America.

The Rural Resources Guide has been prepared to meet this need. It provides information on technical and financial assistance in a single source. This information can assist rural officials and their constituents in maintaining the vitality of our rural communities.

I look forward to working together with you in the rural development work ahead and believe that this publication will be a valuable contribution.

Secretary of Agriculture

November 30, 1984

Dear Rural Development Colleagues:

Rural development is primarily the work of rural Americans themselves. The Office of Rural Development Policy, however, helps keep rural leaders in both the public and private sectors informed of new ideas, trends, and services that can aid them. This Rural Resources Guide has been prepared for use by local officials to help them in improving the quality of life in their communities as part of our contribution to this effort.

The Office of Rural Development Policy was created by the Secretary of Agriculture in 1981 to serve as an advocate for rural America, to identify its most important needs, and to suggest the most effective means of meeting those needs. In order to accomplish this we seek out and listen to the ideas expressed by individuals in small towns and rural communities. We discovered a need for a publication such as this by listening to rural Americans. To further fulfill our mission, we welcome comments from the readers of the Rural Resources Guide on how it serves them and suggestions on how it might better fill their needs.

I would like to express appreciation to all who provided information for the "Guide". It is through your participation and assistance that we can create positive and progressive change in rural America.

Sincerely,

Bill Phillips Jr

INTRODUCTION

Leaders of small communities in rural America have expressed a need for information on sources of assistance that can help them guide the growth and development of their areas. This Rural Resources Guide is designed to help meet that need.

Although many resources available across the Nation can aid in the development process, the information is often hard for local leaders to get. The Rural Resources Guide will enable local governments and community leaders to quickly identify and locate public and private sources of assistance for rural development.

The Rural Resources Guide is a response to the need for information on technical and financial assistance revealed by the public, local officials, and rural leaders contacted in the course of preparing Better Country: A Strategy for Rural Development in the 1980's. This first strategy document, required by the Rural Development Policy Act of 1980, was submitted to the Congress by the Secretary of Agriculture in February 1983.

"Better Country" outlined the policy initiatives of the Federal Government in encouraging improvement of small communities in rural America. It was the product of consultation with rural experts, citizens, and leaders throughout the country. The role of the National Advisory Council on Rural Development, appointed by Secretary of Agriculture John Block, was critical. The Council, composed of 23 key public and private leaders of rural America, provided ideas and leadership in the strategy development process.

The need for finding a better way to identify and locate appropriate sources of assistance was ranked first by the National Advisory Council, as well as by many of the other rural officials and citizens contacted while preparing the strategy. Small governments are often unaware of the range of developmental services. The problem usually is not a lack of available technical information and aid, but an inability to find it.

The "Guide" is designed for rural officials, including tribal governments and community leaders. The sources of assistance listed generally focus on local governments and communities rather than individuals. Improving the quality of life of a community as a whole will ultimately benefit the individual citizens of rural America.

The Rural Resources Guide catalogs approximately 440 sources of public and private national level technical and financial resource assistance. Because of length, some geographical limitations had to be set. Only those sources that are available in at least a three-State area have been included. For additional information on intrastate programs and other small area sources, a list of the appropriate contacts in each State is provided in the appendix.

The Federal Government is by far the single largest provider of resources, particularly financial ones. Assistance is available in the form of grants, loans, information dissemination, training, and technical assistance. An important tool for those seriously pursuing Federal assistance is the Catalog of Federal Domestic Assistance. It provides detailed information on almost all Federal assistance programs. The "catalog" can be found in many public and university libraries or may be ordered from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402. The price for the 1984 catalog with updates is $36.

A companion tool is the Federal Assistance Programs Retrieval System (FAPRS), a computerized question-and-answer system designed to provide access to the Catalog of Federal Domestic Assistance. The system matches the developmental needs of the applicant with Federal programs for which the applicant meets eligibility criteria. Each State has a contact for FAPRS, usually in the Extension Service or the land-grant colleges. A list of these contacts is found in the appendix.

The main difference between the Rural Resources Guide and all others is its inclusion of private nonprofit resource providers. The private providers include a variety of organizations--interest groups, service and civic clubs, professional and trade associations, churches, foundations--who provide some assistance to rural areas. Most of the private resources are technical in nature, and many require membership in the organization or a fee for services. A source for information on additional foundations that provide grant assistance for specific purposes is the Foundation Directory, which lists participating foundations by State.

Although an attempt was made to include as many nonprofit private providers as possible, no list could be exhaustive. The "Guide" serves as an introduction to the variety of private resources available, and provides enough information for the reader to begin the search for assistance on community concerns.

The "Guide" is organized by topic of interest. Under each topic listed in the table of contents, sources of technical and then financial assistance are presented. Within these two subcategories entries are listed alphabetically by resources provider. Many organizations provide assistance in a variety of areas. In these cases they have been placed under the topic that is most descriptive of their activities and cross-referenced elsewhere.

A comprehensive subject index provides a listing of key words relating to rural development to help readers locate specific information contained in the Rural Resources Guide. Also listed alphabetically within the index are the names of all organizations in the "Guide" providing assistance.

The first listing in the appendix is the Federal information centers which are a focal point for information about Federal Government services, programs, and regulations. The centers assist people who do not know where to turn for an answer, but are not the offices to which an applicant applies for an assistance program. For help with specific resources, the appendix lists Federal agencies' State and regional offices, State government development agencies, and other useful Federal and State contacts, as well as regional offices for private providers. In the main body of the "Guide" each resource included is described in the following format.

RESOURCE:	A brief phrase describes the available assistance so that the reader will know at a glance the applicability.
RESOURCE TITLE:	All Federal programs are titled. In some cases, the common or familiar name is given in parentheses. Few private resources have a specific title.
RESOURCE PROVIDER:	This entry names the organization or agency providing the assistance.
WHO MAY APPLY:	The individuals or levels of government eligible for the assistance or for whom the assistance is appropriat are listed here.
SPECIAL CONDITIONS:	This entry gives any guidelines or conditions limiting or clarifying the use of the resource.
RESOURCE PROVIDED:	A detailed description of the assistance the provider offers is presented here. It should be understood that both the public and private programs listed have limited resources available. As a result, not all requests for assistance can always be met.

RESOURCE CONTACT: The contact listed is the one to whom all first inquiries should be made. The name, address, and telephone number are given. If reference is made to the appendix, the appropriate contact listed there is the one that should be used.

Throughout rural America, committed community leaders search all possible avenues of assistance in their efforts to enhance the quality of life in their communities. The Rural Resources Guide is designed to make that search easier and in the process, improve the communication assistance.

RESOURCE PROVIDER: U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA)

WHO MAY APPLY:
-Municipalities
-Intermunicipal agencies
-State or interstate agencies
-Federally recognized Indian tribal governments

SPECIAL CONDITIONS: For grants awarded before October 1, 1984, 75 percent Federal funding may be provided.

For grants awarded after September 30, 1984, 55 percent Federal funding may be provided.

Exceptions to this are segmented or phased projects and innovative and/or alternative projects (Federal share cannot exceed 85 percent)

Priority is given to areas where a reduction of pollution from municipal discharges would substantially restore surface or groundwater uses.

The grantee must initiate an acceptable system of user charges.

Grantee must require pretreatment of any industrial waste which would otherwise be detrimental to efficient operation and maintenance or prevent the entry of such waste into the treatment plant.

RESOURCE PROVIDED: Funds may be used for:
-construction of municipal wastewater treatment works (including, but not limited to, treatment of industrial waste)
-construction of privately owned individual treatment systems for residences or small commercial establishments constructed and inhabited or in use prior to December 27, 1977. (A municipality must apply on behalf of a number of such systems.)
-planning and design work allowances which will be decided at the time the construction grant is awarded

RESOURCE: Loans for construction of municipal sewage treatment works

RESOURCE TITLE: Loan Guarantees for Construction of Treatment Works

RESOURCE PROVIDER: U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA)

WHO MAY APPLY:
-State and interstate agencies
-Municipalities or intermunicipal agencies that have received or will receive a title II EPA construction grant

SPECIAL CONDITIONS: There is a nonrefundable fee for processing an application and a fee for issuance of a commitment to guarantee a loan.

Funds must not be available from other sources on reasonable terms.

RESOURCE USES: Financing may be used for certain portions of the eligible and allowable local share of a grant for construction of wastewater treatment works.

The Environmental Protection Agency guarantees the loan through the Federal Financing Bank.

RESOURCE: Information, training, and technical assistance on appropriate technology to promote energy self-reliance

RESOURCE TITLE: National Appropriate Technology Assistance Service

RESOURCE PROVIDER: National Center for Appropriate Technology and U.S. Department of Energy

WHO MAY APPLY: Anyone

SPECIAL CONDITIONS: Before calling the National Appropriate Technology Assistance Service, it is a good idea to check with local energy information services who can usually provide information tailored to specific geographic areas

RESOURCE PROVIDED: The National Center for Appropriate Technology:

- conducts research and development activities to identify energy technologies that are both workable and accessible at relatively low cost
- field tests these technologies in actual practical settings
- provides technical assistance and training in application of energy efficient technologies such as home weatherization, passive solar greenhouses, community energy management, and energy-efficient housing design and construction
- distributes "how-to" energy information and publications and produces films and slide tape programs on renewable energy technologies and conservation

Through the National Appropriate Technology Assistance Service, operated for the U.S. Department of Energy by the National Center for Appropriate Technology, assistance may be obtained on practical technologies that lend themselves to self-help and provide solutions to individual energy problems (use of sun, wind, and water resources), and energy and resource conservation methods and devices. Three services are provided:

- tailored information responses
- engineering/scientific technical assistance
- commercialization technical assistance

RESOURCE: Grants for energy conservation projects to aid low-income persons, particularly the elderly and handicapped

RESOURCE TITLE: Weatherization Assistance for Low-Income Persons

RESOURCE PROVIDER: U.S. Department of Energy

WHO MAY APPLY:

- States
- Native American tribal organizations (in certain instances)
- Units of general purpose local government and community action agencies (in the event that a State does not apply)

SPECIAL CONDITIONS: A low-income household is:

- one whose combined income falls at or below 125 percent of the Office of Management and Budget's income poverty guidelines or the basis on which certain Federal, State, and local cash assistance payments have been made

The maximum expenditure per dwelling is:

- for material and related program costs $1,000 and up to $1,600 if additional labor expenditures are required
- limited to $150 for repair costs

States may use up to 5 percent of the total grant for administrative expenses; other grantees may use up to 10 percent

RESOURCE PROVIDED: Funds may be used for:

- caulking
- weatherstripping
- attic insulation
- storm windows
- water heater insulation
- furnace efficiency modifications
- clock thermostats
- certain mechanical measures to heating and cooling systems

RESOURCE CONTACT: Individuals who want to apply for assistance should contact the local weatherization agency or community action agency. Others should contact the U.S. Department of Energy regional office
